

CLEVELAND IS A REAL NIMROD

Ex-President Shoots Exceedingly Well and Thus Far He Is the Champion Hunter of the District Around Princeton.

WITH A PARTY HE BAGS FIFTEEN RABBITS.

After a Day's Scramble Over Fences and Across Fields He Returns Home Almost as Fresh as at the Start.

"Mr. Rabbit, Mr. Rabbit, don't you hear that gun?"

"Don't you tarry, don't you tarry, but lift your leg an' run."

Over fences and through them, when the rails were far enough apart; across green meadows and stubble fields, up hill and down again, with the spirit of a boy out for the first time with his first gun, yet shooting straight and with as much regard for other people's sheep, mid-ribs and head coverings, Grover Cleveland kept a rabbit-hunting party going a whole day in the neighborhood of Princeton, N. J., his home. When night came he seemed as fresh as when he started, and while his companions were nearly played out and ready to quit, he said he would not be through until he had gotten back to town and eaten rabbit pie. Of course they had rabbit pie too.

Mr. Cleveland shoots exceedingly well. So far he has to his credit the best bag of the season for the district around Princeton, and his friend, Capt. Van Kirk, the Squire of Rosedale, when the sport was over, declared the statesman to be "the champion shot" of all that countryside.

Start of the Hunt.

It was a few minutes after 8.30 o'clock when Mr. Cleveland drove out to the Van Kirk farm. The bounds of the sport, for they had seen the gun, and the members of the hunting party, which consisted of Capt. Van Kirk, Earl Priest, a chemist of Princeton, and W. G. Horner of Rosedale, were ready to be off. Mr. Cleveland, dressed in a brown suit of coarse cloth and a white felt hat, leaped out of his own rig, and a moment later the four gentlemen, with two farm hands, who were to back up the game, were piled in another buggy and headed for the hunting ground. The Squire of Rosedale sat beside his host and smoked a very black cigar, while Mr. Priest and Mr. Horner stood up behind and kept their equilibrium and themselves in the vehicle by holding on tenaciously to the shoulders of the two hunters in front.

The field selected by Capt. Van Kirk was not a great distance away, and the sounds of the gun were heard in the distance. The Squire and Mr. Cleveland rushed the first bunny, and when the party turned homeward at 1 o'clock for luncheon it had shot only ten hares, but seven were Mr. Cleveland's.

In the middle of the afternoon the hunters started for again in the same manner as they had done in the morning, and it was not because the hares shouldn't have turned over, but because it didn't that its load reached its destination without a spill. Mr. Cleveland had his second wind, so to speak, and by the way he went over fences and through them, as has been said, it was evident that he intended to do something. The first shot came to him again and he outdid every one of his companions in the game-getting that followed.

Applied Vainly Desired.

While the shooting was going on a man driving a wagonful of apples pulled up alongside of the hunters.

"How many they got?" he asked a boy on his way home to school, who hung on a top rail looking at the shooters with yearning eyes.

"Well, that's tolerable for that crowd, but I got eight an' I was all alone yesterday."

"Mr. Cleveland killed most of them," the man with the apples was informed.

"Yes, I heard that he can shoot some," and he drove off, and the boy seemed keenly disappointed.

The shadows of evening had begun to slant by this time and the hunting party started for the spot where they had left their buggy, the beaters following with their pockets bulging out with the game that had been slain.

"This is a hunting day," said Mr. Cleveland when he thought that he was going to be a political question, and he spoke in such a tone that it was evident he did not care to talk about the things William Jennings Bryan had been saying about him. He was going home to eat rabbit pie, but he was going to eat rabbit pie.

Mr. Cleveland will leave Princeton tomorrow but what his plans are he has not yet announced.

GROVER CLEVELAND AS HE LOOKED WHILE OUT SHOOTING IN JERSEY.

W. J. BRYAN TO BE GUEST OF CROKER

Had Been Invited to Go to Wantage and Told Friend Before Departure He Would Spend a Week or More There.

When William Jennings Bryan sailed for Europe it was with the avowed intention of becoming the guest for at least a week of Richard Croker at Wantage. The day before he sailed, Mr. Bryan visited the office of the Aqueduct Commissioner in the Stewart Building. He left the building accompanied by Mr. Hoag, an intimate friend, and both dined at the Astor House. There Mr. Bryan told of his intention to visit Mr. Croker by invitation.

Secretary Walker, of the Aqueduct Commission, told an Evening World reporter to-day that he also had been informed of Mr. Bryan's contemplated trip to Wantage.

"I have known of it for several days," said Mr. Walker. Mr. Bryan and Mr. Croker are fast friends.

"LION SERMON."

Over 250 years ago a worthy citizen of London, by name John Gayer, made a journey to those countries in which lions abound and met one face to face. In his dilemma the traveler invoked the aid of Providence and had the satisfaction of seeing his adversary flee away. Gratitude in those days was perhaps not so rare a feeling as it is now, so when he returned once more to his own land of London Sir John Gayer (Lord Mayor in 1666) did not forget his escape, in commemoration whereof he took the pains to have a sermon preached on each succeeding anniversary. Last month the old custom was observed in the Church of St. Katherine Cree, London, the Bishop of Trinidad being the preacher of the annual "lion sermon," as it is called.

FLYWHEEL HURLS A MAN AGAINST WALL

William Wood, an Engineer, Is Seriously Hurt When Flung Across Room at the Lafayette Baths.

Hurted fifteen feet by the flywheel of a big engine in the Lafayette Baths, in Lafayette place, William Wood, the engineer, lay unconscious for half an hour before he was found. It was by the merest chance that he was not left there to die. He was carried to St. Vincent's Hospital, where he is now in a serious condition. Wood was cleaning a dynamo. He was a loose jumper, the sleeve of which was unbuttoned. The loose cuff hung away from his wrist and was caught in the belt of a wheel. In an instant the engineer was dashed to the floor and then hurled as suddenly upward.

His body shot through the air and was stopped by the wall, fifteen feet away. He fell into the corner, unconscious and bleeding from many wounds. There was no one else in the engine-room and the accident was so sudden that Wood had no chance to make a outcry.

Half an hour later the clerk in the office above wanted the engineer and rang the bell. Several times he pressed the button and at last thought that the engineer was asleep. One of the attendants was sent into the engine room and he found Wood unconscious.

Policeman Simmons, of the Mercer street station, was outside the building and, while attending to the injured man, he found above and laid him on one of the cots. He sent for an ambulance. Dr. Simons came from St. Vincent's. In the operating room at the hospital it was found that Wood's right arm was badly crushed. There were several bad contusions on the head, but the doctors were unable to determine whether the skull had been fractured.

Almost at the same time the engineer was taken to the hospital Daniel Wood was brought in suffering from hemorrhages. He was on his way to his home at No. 18 Bedford street and dropped, exhausted, to the pavement. Dr. Gulliver took him to the hospital in an ambulance. The two men lay side by side in the same occupied cot side by side. They are not relatives.

PROMPTLY CORRECTED.

Two young fellows at Liverpool, partners in the tea trade, were the best of friends, and their intimacy extended to personal as well as to business matters.

One of them, a simple-minded fellow, was a bachelor and was in the habit of reading to his partner extracts from letters from a lady in the North of England who signed herself "Susie."

The married one went to China for twelve months and returned just in time for the wedding of his partner. "I hardly feel like a stranger," he said in his sweetest tones, addressing the bride.

"In fact, I feel as though I ought to be well acquainted with my partner's wife," said the bride, often to the husband's read to me extracts from his dear Susie's letters."

"The fact is, the husband and the speaker were studying as the bride drew herself up and said emphatically and distinctly, "Your pardon—my name is Helen!"—F.T.Bits.
